Miss Watkins Dies

The University lost one of its most beloved persons this winter when Miss Mary Herbert Watkins died on January 20 following a sudden heart attack at her home, 1429 Clifton Street, Washington. Miss "Daisy," as she was known to her many friends in the University, had served as secretary to Dean William Allen Wilbur for 36 years. She was known and loved by thousands of students who came to know her through their many contacts with Dean Wilbur's office.

Her death came as a shock to her friends and associates because she was apparently robust and had always enjoyed excellent health. She attended the Inaugural parade and ceremonies the day she was taken ill.

For the past five years she had been collaborating with Dean Wilbur in the writing of a history of the University, which the Board of Trustees had commissioned him to prepare upon his retirement from active teaching service in 1935. Because of her long service and intimate knowledge of the University, she was able to take an active part in the preparation of this book. This work is now about three-fourths completed.

Miss Watkins was born in St. Clair, Pennsylvania, and came to Washington as a young girl with her father, the late William George Watkins, who was in the Government service. Among those surviving is Miss Rhoda Watkins, her sister, who was graduated from the University with the AB (w. d.) degree in 1906 and with the AM degree in 1910. Miss Rhoda Watkins teaches at McKinley High School in Washington.

Miss "Daisy" had been an active member of Foundry Methodist Church for many years and was also a member of the St. David's Society of Washington. She had long been a patroness of the Alpha Pi chapter of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority at the University.

Tribute to Miss "Daisy's" unusual character and to her faithful service to the University was paid in the following letter written by Mrs. Joshua Evans, Jr., AB and

TD (w. d.) 13, Ed.D (h) 32, of the University's Board of Trustees:

" 'Miss Daisy,' as we who knew her at George Washington called her, always had time to be interested in helping anyone who needed a word of encouragement and advice. Her patience was inexhaustible, just as her courtesy and thoughtfulness were never failing.

"Everyone who had a little visit with her always felt the better and the happier for it. As I look back over the years and realize how fully she gave of her time from the routine of her life and consider how much interruptions sap one's strength and energy when there is a definite task to be done, I appreciate how truly great was her gift of service to us when she daily performed the duties of student advisers and personnel guidance directors of today in addition to everything else that she accomplished for The George Washington University.

"All of us who were associated with her will always hold her memory in affectionate remembrance."

Pan American Conference

With the war in Europe drawing more nations closer to actual participation each day, particular attention is being focused by the United States upon the importance of preserving solidarity in this hemisphere.

The Fourth Annual Pan American Conference, sponsored by the Inter-American Center of the University under the direction of George Howland Cox, was held January 13 and 14. The subject of this year's conference was: "New World Security: Military, Cultural, and Economic Defense of the Western Hemisphere." Leaders in government, education, diplomacy, the press, the army, and international trade were heard on the program. Panel discussions followed the formal addresses each evening.

Among the speakers heard were: John I. B. McCulloch of the Foreign Policy Association; Harry Warner Frantz of the United Press; Dean William Crane Johnstone of the Junior College of the University; President Kendrick Nichols Marshall of Chevy Chase Junior College; Dean William C. Van Vleck of the Law School; Dean Frederick M. Feiker of the School of Engineering; Robert Lincoln O'Brien, Former Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission; and Dean Henry Grattan Doyle of Columbian College.

Members of the conference recognized but were not perturbed over the present relationship between Japan and the United States. There should be no worry over Japanese economic penetration of Latin America, they concluded, but concern was expressed over political intrigue on the part of Japan and its Axis partners.

Said Dean Johnstone, whose new book, "The United States and Japan's New Order," has just been published, "We need have no worry about Japanese trade competition, but we must not forget that Japanese and German policies are, for the present, closely bound together. The success of Japan's new order in Asia is largely dependent on the success of Germany's new order in Europe. It is this political connection of Germany and Japan that needs watching, it is this connection which is of most significance in Latin America and of utmost importance to the United States."

Women's Activities Building

A movement to raise funds for the erection of a women's activities building, started in the Fall of 1938 by student and alumnae organizations, has advanced steadily since it was inaugurated.

Since 1938, nearly $2,000 has been raised through card parties and musicals, a theater and dance recital, "white elephant" sales, a silver tea, a fashion show, "The G Street Faculty Follies," and contributions from students, faculty and alumni. The "Buy a Brick" campaign, which was started in 1939, was renewed again this winter, and it is planned to continue the drive during the remainder of this year.

Member groups co-operating in the movement are: Columbian Women, Mortar Board, Women's Student Government Association, Women's Athletic Association, Panhellenic Association, Women's Intramural Board, Colonial Campus Club, Sorority Hall Council, Alpha Lambda Delta, Kappa Beta Pi, Phi Delta Delta, Pi Lambda Theta, Phi Delta Gamma, Panhellenic Alumni Group, and the General Alumni Association.

Miss Ruth Atwell, Director of Physical Education for Women at the University, is Chairman of the Committee and Mrs. Helen Taylor Hanford is Treasurer. The project has been approved by President Marvin and the Board of Trustees.

The building as planned will serve not only students of the University but women graduates and women members of the Faculty, accommodating a large number of activities, recreational and social, as well as sports. It will provide the most modern facilities for the Department of Physical Education for Women, the activities of the Women's Athletic Association, and the women's intramural sports program.

There will be a main gymnasium large enough for basketball, a smaller student gymnasium for games such as badminton and volleyball, and a small gymnasium for the use of alumnae and faculty women; a dance studio with a small stage; and a full-size swimming pool with gallery and dressing room, showers and lockers. Other sports will be accommodated in the archery range, bowling alleys, squash court, handball court and fencing room.

Here will be located the offices and classrooms of the Department of Physical Education for Women and the offices of the Director of Personnel Guidance. In the medical unit will be the offices and an examining room of the University Physician for Women and a corrective gymnasium.

The building will also serve as a center for the club and social activities on the campus. A large dining hall will be available for dances and banquets and there will be lounges with kitchenettes for teas and parties. Special rooms are planned for club meetings and for offices of campus organizations.

There is a great need for a women's activities building on the campus. The University has so greatly expanded during the past several years that present facilities are now inadequate for its increased activities. It is hoped that these funds will be added to through gifts from alumni and friends of the University.

Two New Fraternities

Significant among the winter fraternal events on the campus were the establishment of chapters of Pi Kappa Alpha, a leading national secret, social fraternity, and Nu Sigma Nu, an outstanding national medical fraternity. Pi Kappa Alpha installed Delta Alpha chapter on February 22. The new Pi Kappa Alpha chapter was formerly Tau Sigma Rho, and was established here in April, 1938. The national organization was petitioned last fall. Located at 2448 Massachusetts Avenue, the house of the new fraternity overlooks Rock Creek Park and is one of the school's finest.

Pi Kappa Alpha, established in 1868 at the University of Virginia, now has 81 chapters spread throughout the United States. An initiation committee composed of representatives from Washington and Lee University, Hampden Sydney College, the College of William and Mary, the University of Richmond, and the University of Virginia, came to Washington to install the chapter.

Phi Mu Sigma, local medical fraternity at the University, became the 43rd chapter of Nu Sigma Nu, national medical fraternity, in ceremonies held at the Mayflower Hotel on February 8. Nu Sigma Nu was founded in 1882 at the University of Michigan and is the oldest national medical fraternity in the United States. One of the seven original founders of the group was William Mayo, who later became co-founder of the famed Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota. The new chapter has 18 faculty and 29 student members.

Progress in Journalism

Since its establishment in 1937 the Department of Journalism at the University has made steady advancement. At the beginning there was only one instructor in the department. With the appointment of Mrs. Marcelle LeMénager Lane, former Director of the Press Bureau, as Assistant Professor of Journalism and Executive Officer for the department, new courses were announced last September and opened to day school students as well as to those who attend in the evening.

The Journalism curriculum was enlarged to include a new course in reporting, an introductory survey of journalism and a course reviewing the influences which shape the newspaper's content and attitudes.

To facilitate the classroom work in these courses and to provide a work-shop similar to the city room for a metropolitan newspaper, a journalism laboratory was established in the Social Science Hall at the opening of the second semester. More than 30 new typewriters were purchased for the use of students taking these courses.

Mrs. Lane is enthusiastic over the possibilities offered by the laboratory. "This will enable us to train our students under conditions similar to those in the city room of a metropolitan newspaper," she said. "We will benefit greatly by the addition of this laboratory."

Catnaps and Divorces

The Ninth Annual Post-Graduate Clinic of the University's School of Medicine was held February 14 and 15. Under the supervision of Dr. Harry F. Dowling, Clinical Professor of Medicine and Director of the Clinic, more than 50 scientific assemblies, demonstrations and laboratory inspections were planned. The Fifteenth Annual Banquet of The George Washington University Medical Society at the Mayflower Hotel completed the program.

Dr. Charles W. Mayo, of the famed Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota, led the list of prominent visiting speakers. He conducted a clinic on diseases of the colon. Other speakers included Dr. Louis H. Douglass, University of Maryland; Dr. Edward Davis, Rush Medical College; Dr. Gilbert A. Ross, Duke University; Dr. Tom D. Spies, University of Cincinnati; Dr. Paul D. White, Harvard Medical School; and Dr. Walter A. Bloedorn, Dr. Charles Stanley White, Dr. Harry H. Donnally, and Dr. Samuel M. Dodek of The George Washington University.

The program of this year's Clinic was dedicated to Dr. William Johnston Mallory, Professor Emeritus of Medicine, and was planned so that the subject matter was diversified and of interest to every practitioner.

On the first day of the Clinic Dr. Bloedorn, Dean of the School of Medicine, conducted physicians on a tour of Gallinger Municipal Hospital.

An "anti-divorce" drug and an explanation why some of us can't help taking catnaps during the day, were among modern medical discoveries revealed at the clinic. Dr. Tom D. Spies, of the University of Cincinnati, one of the outstanding vitamin authorities in the country, told why husbands and wives sometimes are grouchy. If your wife is cranky don't jump to the conclusion, he implored, that she doesn't like the way you part your hair. She may need more vitamins. And if your husband is a grouch, don't immediately lambast him for complaining about the grocery bills. He may be able to use doses of a drug made up of nicotinic acid, vitamin B-1 and possibly several other vitamins.

Another discovery was revealed by Dr. Bloedorn when he stated that the tendency of office workers to fall asleep at their work may be due to a rare disease, called narcolepsy. Narcolepsy, he said, is very rare and so cannot serve as an excuse for many cat nappers. But those who are subject to it have an irresistible desire to sleep during the day for brief periods. They may doze off while talking, working or driving. After a few moments they awaken refreshed, as though nothing had happened—unless of course they have run into a tree. The disease, Dr. Bloedorn said, has a psychogenic origin.

Dr. Spies, describing irritability that arises from the lack of vitamins, said it was a difficult symptom to catalogue and

PACING THE COLONIALS IN SPORTS

ONE OF the most significant events in the entire athletic history of the University took place December 14 when the Southern Conference elected The George Washington University to its membership, effective next September. At the Conference meeting on that date at Charlotte, North Carolina, Geary Eppley, director of athletics at the University of Maryland, our nearest Conference neighbor, presented the University's application for membership, and the vote on our admission was unanimous. Among those who spoke favorably of the University's petition was Wallace Wade, the famed football coach at Duke University, long a power in Southern athletics. And so starting with the next football season, the Colonials will compete with their Southern neighbors for the Conference championships in football, basketball, baseball, and tennis. It is not unlikely that the University will be represented in the Conference by track and golf teams within a few years.

Our election to membership in the Conference, for which Athletic Director Max Farrington and Coach Bill Reinhart have been working for several years, climaxes the University's recent athletic policy which has emphasized relations with local and nearby colleges and universities. George Washington University has always, as far back as the '90s, looked to the South for much of its athletic competition. Through the years our schedules have always contained a number of leading Southern institutions. This policy has been strengthened since early 1938 when the University committed itself to a sort of "good neighbor" policy in athletics—a policy that led toward more contests in all fields of athletics with our neighbors. The reopening of relations with Georgetown and Maryland in various sports was the first step in this direction. Then came renewed competitions with Washington and Lee, the University of Virginia, Clemson College and others. The next step was our election to membership in the Southern Conference.

Eases Schedule Problems

Election to the Conference solves many of the schedule-making problems faced by any director of athletics. Each year the Colonials will play at least four Conference opponents in football, ten in basketball and ten in baseball. Herein, then, is found the nucleus of all future athletic schedules. With these games as the basis of our schedules, we can also continue to meet Georgetown and other Eastern schools and to schedule such intersectional contests as appear advisable.

Membership in the Conference also gives the members of our teams a goal at which to set their efforts. The opportunity to achieve Conference championships is an added incentive to all who compete in athletics. It also adds luster and spectator-interest to all of our home engagements with Conference members. Our basketball games with the University of Maryland, for instance, will have more at stake than the fight for supremacy in the District of Columbia area—they may have a decided bearing on the Southern Conference championship tournament, held each March at Raleigh, North Carolina.

President Marvin Pleased

President Cloyd Heck Marvin, who has maintained an unwavering interest in our athletic teams, was pleased with the University's admission to the Conference and regards it as a type of accreditation, such as the University has received for high academic standing in the fields of medicine, law, engineering, pharmacy, arts and letters, etc.

President Marvin made the following statement is regard to the University's admission to the Conference:

"I am pleased with the good news about our election to the Southern Conference. We recognize the responsibilities that come with membership in such an athletic family, and shall sincerely try to be a worthy member of the group.

"We are particularly grateful to President (H. C.) Byrd and to Mr. Eppley of the University of Maryland who have seen fit to so graciously sponsor our membership. It is my feeling that this will enable us to work more closely with the University of Maryland to the end of building up better athletics for this community.

"In one sense this is a homecoming for

The George Washington University as our early records show that we competed with many of the very teams which now go to make up the Southern Conference."

Keen Basketball Interest

Because of the general excellence of its basketball teams under Coach Reinhart, students and alumni of the University are expected to take particular interest in the annual Conference basketball tournament. Eight of the 16 (our admission will bring the total to 16) Conference teams who make the best records during the regular schedule play qualify for the tournament. The number is then reduced by elimination until only two teams remain. They play for the championship. This title was won in March by Duke University. North Carolina won the crown last year. In football and baseball, of necessity, the championships are decided on the basis of greatest number of games won from Conference opponents.

The Southern Conference is one of the oldest athletic organizations in the country. At present it is made up of 15 colleges and universities from four states. These are Washington and Lee, V.M.I., Virginia Tech, William and Mary, and the University of Richmond in Virginia; University of North Carolina, Duke, North Carolina State, Wake Forest, and Davidson in North Carolina; University of South Carolina, Clemson, Furman, and The Citadel in South Carolina; and the University of Maryland.

The Conference maintains strict eligibility and academic requirements. It bars from competition transfer students from four-year schools. Present officials of the Conference are: Dr. A. W. Hobbs of the University of North Carolina, president; Dr. Lee Milford of Clemson, vice president; and Col. William Couper of V.M.I., secretary-treasurer.

Conference Profits Also

So much for the Conference from the standpoint of the University. From the standpoint of the Conference, our admission was of great importance also. As Athletic Director Farrington said, "the University profits by joining the Conference, and I feel that the Conference also profits by adding us as a member." In the first place, as Coach Wade of Duke pointed out in his speech on the floor of the Conference meeting at Charlotte, The George Washington University stands academically as high as any school in the Conference. In the second place, the northern end of the loop is strengthened by our admission. The University of Maryland is far removed from other Conference members. She had no neighbor in the group and teams from the Carolinas had to travel a considerable distance to meet Maryland at College Park. In basketball, baseball and tennis, where it is customary to play two or three games on a single trip, these schools now can fill out their trip schedules by playing Maryland and George Washington, instead of meeting Maryland and some other non-Conference school, as they have in the past.

Relish Playing Here

The University has the largest enrollment of any school in the Conference and is located in the largest city thus represented. All Southern teams, especially those in Virginia and the Carolinas, relish the opportunity of playing in the Nation's Capital. And finally, because of the fine conduct of our teams at all times on the playing field and because of the high standards which they uphold, the Conference members felt that the University was deserving of such membership and recognition.

The announcement of our admission was greeted with unanimous approval by the press in Washington and in the South Atlantic area. All regarded this step as an important one for both the University and the Conference. Coach Bill Reinhart reported an enthusiastic welcome for our basketball team throughout the Conference territory this winter when the Colonials played the University of Richmond, the University of South Carolina, Clemson, Furman and Duke on their first extensive Southern trip.

Basketball in Review

In basketball this year, the University was represented by one of the best teams in its history—a team that won more games than any other George Washington quintet and a team that was but a single game removed from a national tournament invitation and consequent nationwide recognition. This team won 18 games and lost but 4 and played a vital part in college basketball's greatest season in Washington. To the dismay of our alumni and students, however, two of the four defeats suffered by this team were at the hands of Georgetown, our old rivals, which gave the Hilltoppers undisputed possession of the District of Columbia championship.

Going into the second engagement with Georgetown, the last of the season for our boys, they had won 18 games against 3 defeats, and with a good chance to avenge an earlier defeat at the hands of the Hoyas, were picked as a strong contender for both of the important invitation tournaments. Both bids, however, were contingent upon a victory over Georgetown—and when our boys failed in this emergency the gloom on G Street for days thereafter could have been cut with a knife. With everything to gain and nothing to lose in this important renewal of the city series, the Hoyas had cut our boys out of a slice of national recognition with a clean 41-34 triumph.

Before nearly 6,000 fans, largest number ever to witness a basketball game in the District of Columbia; President Cloyd Heck Marvin, Trustee John Brookes and hundreds of old grads, the Colonials went down in this bitter battle simply because they tried too hard. They were too tight, too anxious and the cool Hilltoppers took advantage of their distraught mental condition. And with this defeat our chance for a bid to the Madison Square Garden tournament or to the National Collegiate Invitation Tournament was gone.

As one old grad later summed up the situation: "It was just too bad that Georgetown had to come along with its best team in history the same year that we had our great opportunity to make a killing in basketball."

A Stretch Battle

This keen rivalry provided Washington with its finest cage campaign on record. These two teams battled straight down through the stretch of the season ranked among the best in the country and the result was that record crowd which gathered for the final exciting game on March 5. The Colonials, despite their defeats by Georgetown, played some of the best basketball ever displayed by a George Washington five. As a prelude to their actual participation in the Southern Conference next winter, Coach Bill Reinhart's well-drilled charges played 12 Conference games and won 11 of them. At the conclusion of their Conference schedule against V.P.I., the Colonials were called "the uncrowned champions of the South."

Such outstanding teams as Minnesota, Kansas State, St. John's of Brooklyn, University of Virginia, West Virginia, Army, Navy, Duke, Washington and Lee, South Carolina, Clemson, Maryland, Furman, Richmond, Davidson and V.P.I. were beaten by the Colonials. Georgetown, Duke and the famous Oklahoma A. & M. Aggies recorded the four victories over our boys.

Top performances of the season were those against mighty Minnesota when Captain Joe Comer, the lean, nice-looking Washington lad, chucked in a last-minute shot that brought a 46-43 victory, and against powerful St. John's of Brooklyn when the Colonials hit their greatest pace of the campaign to roll up a 59-42 margin just two nights prior to the second Georgetown encounter.

For the greater part of the season, the first team was composed of Comer and Matt Zunic, forwards; Charley Jones, center, and Lou Veltri and Bobby Gilham, guards. Veltri and Comer are seniors, and the three others juniors. Eddie Amendola, a senior; Roy McNeil, a junior, and Joe Gallagher, a sophomore, were the outstanding reserve players. Amendola saw almost continuous service and early in the season for a time wrested a starting berth from Jones. With Jones, Zunic, Comer, Amendola and McNeil all standing well above six feet in height, and with Veltri and Gilham supplying tremendous speed, this team possessed an abundance of height and speed. Its fast breaking attack was beautiful to watch and at times its shooting was uncanny in its accuracy. Defensively, at times, it was superb. Zunic, one of the University's all-time greats, and Veltri, a fine little guard, were named to the first all-District of Columbia team selected by the Washington Post. Comer and Gilham made the second team.

Comer Sad

Saddest sight of the entire season, perhaps, was Captain Comer wandering out of Riverside Stadium the night of his last college game, that fearful Georgetown encounter, with the tears rolling down his cheeks. A severely sprained ankle kept him on the bench the entire game and all he could do was sit there and suffer.

Contributing greatly to the general success and unusual interest in the team was the improvement in playing and spectator conditions offered by Riverside Stadium, scene of all but three of the home games. With a capacity of about 5,500 and located but a few blocks from the University campus, this stadium was filled for the important contests with Georgetown, Minnesota, Oklahoma A. & M., St. John's and Virginia. Interest in college basketball soared this winter and this growth is expected to continue next year.

THE UNIVERSITY AFIELD

Faculty Veterans Honored

(See pictures, pages 12 and 13)

TRIBUTE was paid to the 19 members of the faculty who have served 25 years or longer at the General Alumni Association's Spring Luncheon, held April 5 at the National Press Club. With approximately 400 in attendance, it was one of the largest spring luncheons in the history of the University.

Guests of honor were Dean and Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle. Dean Doyle is Professor of Romance Languages and Dean of Columbian College. He spoke to the luncheon guests on "Wholehearted Inter-Americanism." Mrs. Doyle is president of the District of Columbia Board of Education.

In his address Dean Doyle asked for economic cooperation with South America and hard study on its languages to make "a two-way affair" of United States friendship with that continent. Summarizing common objections to the study of Spanish, such as immorality in the literature and abundance of translations, he stated that only through study of the language could the South Americans be fully understood. Racial, religious, cultural, political, and linguistic obstacles seriously impede sincere inter-American friendship, he said.

Paying tribute to the 19 veterans of the Faculty, Dean Elmer Louis Kayser pointed out that 15 of them were graduated from the University and another was once enrolled here.

Of the 19 professors and deans honored, 11 are in the School of Medicine, three in Columbian College, four in the Law School, and one in the School of Engineering. Those in the School of Medicine are: Dr. Daniel LeRay Borden, Associate Professor of Surgery and University Surgeon; Dr. Cline N. Chipman, Associate in Anesthesia; Dr. Coursen Baxter Conklin, Clinical Professor of Medicine; Dr. Harry H. Donnally, Professor of Pediatrics; Dr. Frank Adelbert Hornaday, Assistant Professor of Medicine and Consulting University Physician; Dr. Howard Francis Kane, Professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology; Dr. Harry Hyland Kerr, Clinical Professor of Surgery; Dr. William Berry Marbury, Clinical Professor of Surgery; Dr. Richard Knight Thompson, Associate in Dental Surgery; Dr. Elijah White Titus, Clinical Professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology; and Dr. Charles Stanley White, Professor of Surgery.

In the Law School: Dean William C. Van Vleck; Loyd Hall Sutton, Adjunct Professor of Law; John Wilmer Latimer, Professor of Law; and Levi Russell Alden, Adjunct Professor of Law.

Classroom and Campus

differed a great deal from either pellagra or beri beri—diseases that arise from the lack of vitamins in the diet. He illustrated his lecture with a story concerning one of his friends.

The friend, a distinguished American scientist, confided he was on the point of getting a divorce from his wife to whom he had been happily married for 20 years. The friend's wife was irritable with him and the children. Dr. Spies suggested that the woman might need vitamins, but his friend was not at all convinced.

A few weeks later, Dr. Spies related, he received a letter from the friend saying that the marital troubles were all patched up. Secretly he had substituted vitamin pills for aspirin tablets in a bottle that his wife was in the habit of using for headaches. The pills he thus tricked her into taking contained nicotinic acid and B-1. She never knew the difference. In a few days her headaches stopped and she became as gracious and pleasant as the bride of 20 years before.

The guest of honor and chief speaker at the Fifteenth Annual Medical Society banquet was Dr. Carlos N. Brin, a graduate of the University medical school in 1916 and Ambassador from Panama to this country. Dr. Brin spoke of the present status of the medical profession in Panama, most of the members of which are products of medical schools in the United States. Before entering the diplomatic service, he was chief surgeon of the Santa Tomas Hospital in Panama City and is recognized in Latin America as a leading physician.

Engineering School Accredited

Last October Dean Frederick M. Feiker was notified that the School of Engineering had been fully accredited by the Engineers' Council for Professional Development. The Council's committee on engineering schools visited the University on an inspection tour last spring. On the basis of equipment now in use and on the basis of the curricula submitted by the University, the departments of Civil, Electrical and Mechanical engineering have been approved by the Council.

With the accreditation of the School of Engineering, all of the University's schools and colleges for which a national accrediting body exists, are now approved by their respective accrediting agencies.

The School of Engineering has expanded its physical equipment and laboratory space in the past year with the construction of a new third story on the engineering building and the development of a new testing laboratory in the basement of Corcoran Hall. This reorganization will provide space for the expansion of Mechanical Engineering equipment.

The George Washington School of Engineering thus becomes one of 112 accredited engineering schools in the country, and it will be carried on the approved list of the Engineers' Council for Professional Development. This year the School of Engineering showed an increase of 25 per cent in its enrollment, Dean Feiker stated.

"Foundation Stone"

Mrs. Lella Warren, a graduate of the University, produced one of the year's outstanding novels when her Foundation Stone, a story of the Old South, was released last fall. Now past its ninth printing, the book has been so popularly received by readers everywhere that Mrs. Warren already has received several attractive offers for movie rights to the novel. The author, who once worked on the staff of The University Hatchet, recently told of twelve years of research and writing in gathering material for the book. Her work was interrupted by two years of serious illness when Mrs. Roosevelt inspired her to "keep on going on." A native of Clanton, Alabama, Mrs. Warren feels that she belongs to that state, though she has lived in many sections of the country. She moved about the country from city to city with her father, Dr. Benjamin Swart Warren, who finally in 1912 moved to Washington, where he was Assistant Surgeon General under Dr. Rupert Blue.

Beginning her writing career at the age of eight, she continued her efforts through Western High School, Goucher College, and The George Washington University, entering the University in 1918 and receiving her A.B. degree in 1921. In 1926 she sold her first novel, A Touch of Earth. Then followed contracts with a number of magazines. Cosmopolitan, Red Book, Collier's, among others, carried her stories.

Foundation Stone, Mrs. Warren says, is one of a trilogy: the first deals with the Old South through the Civil War days; the second will be of a scientific nature, having as its background the United States Public Health Service; and the third will have an economic theme, carrying the Whetstones to Washington.

Two other post graduate courses in ophthalmology took place in April. The program included the University's fifth annual six-day intensive Post-Graduate Course in Ophthalmology, April 7 to 13, and a six-day practical course in surgery, pathology and orthoptics, limited to 25 participants, April 14 to 19.

Thirty-six lecturers from important medical centers throughout the United States, including 29 guest lecturers and 7 resident members of the staff of the Department of Ophthalmology of the University, composed the staff of instruction.
